Planting and Care of Daylilies

INTRODUCTION: Please understand that some cultivars just do not grow as large as others do, therefore, sizes of plants will vary. Daylilies are among the easiest of perennials to grow and can last a lifetime if transplanted about every 5 years and given general garden care. Daylilies grow best in sun to partial shade with a minimum of 6 hours of sun for best bloom. They will grow in almost any soil, but if you amend the soil with compost, manure peat moss, etc, and fertilize with a balanced fertilizer early in the spring, the results will be spectacular. Do not plant in poorly drained areas or in competition with trees or large shrub roots.

DRY, LIMP AND YELLOW LEAVES: Don't worry! Yellowing of leaves is normal after digging and/or shipping your plant. Actually these leaves can be removed since the plant will usually grow new ones within a few days of replanting (except in the fall). The plants often become limp (especially the smaller varieties) but, again, don't worry, have a little faith because you now have a plant that will give you years of enjoyment.

PRE-PLANTING: When you get your plants home, it is recommended to soak the roots in a weak solution of fertilizer for 2-6 hours. This helps promote the new growth and rehydrates the root system. If your plants have been shipped, they will have bare roots (no soil) and will have been cut back to 6 to 8 inches into fans. Remove any unwanted leaves, soak and plant as soon as possible. If you cannot plant immediately, keep plants out of the sun. Generally, daylilies should not be planted closer than 18 inches apart (see diagram below).

PLANTING: After your soil is prepared, dig a hole that is larger than the root mass. Make a mound in the center of the hole and place the plant roots over this mound. Fill the hole so the crown (where the roots and foliage meet) is even with the surround soil surface. DO NOT PLANT TOO DEEP. Firm the soil around the plant and water thoroughly, but do not keep too wet. Water again when the surface of the soil is drying. Daylilies should be mulched with 1 to 2 inches of pine needles, shredded hard wood bark, compost or any loose and airy material. Mulching retains moisture and controls grass and weed until the daylily becomes established.

CARE AFER PLANTING:

Daylilies are practically disease and pest free. However, it may be necessary to watch for thrips, aphids and spider mites. Mites draw the chlorophyll from the leave. The leaves lose their color, turn tan, then brown and could die. Heavily infested plant may be covered with fine webbing. Aphid damage appears in several forms. Characteristics are irregular color in new growth, white flecks on the foliage or clear sticky substance on the leaf surface. Thrips feed on the bloom and tender branches of daylilies. Rough lesions on the stems or bent and twisted stems with malformed buds characterize Thrip damage. An infested plant could be removed from the garden: however, with proper chemicals available today, thrips can be eliminated and controlled.
